The Story of Sadako Sasaki and the Thousand Cranes

In the aftermath of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, Japan, on August 6, 1945, a young girl named Sadako Sasaki emerged as a symbol of hope and resilience. Despite being diagnosed with leukemia as a result of radiation exposure, Sadako refused to give up. Inspired by an ancient Japanese legend, she began folding origami paper cranes, believing that if she could fold 1,000 of them, her wish for a cure would be granted.

'Sadako Cranes': A Moving Tribute

Judith Loske's 'Sadako Cranes' is a beautifully illustrated and emotionally resonant children's book that tells the story of Sadako Sasaki's life and her unwavering spirit. Through lyrical prose and evocative illustrations, Loske captures the essence of Sadako's journey, from her initial diagnosis to her final days. The book is not only a tribute to Sadako herself, but also a reminder of the devastating effects of war and the importance of peace.
