

Unveiling the Hidden Truths: A Comprehensive Guide to Navigating the Acting Business with Your Child

The world of acting holds boundless potential for young and aspiring performers. However, navigating the industry can be a daunting task, especially for parents who want to support their children's dreams while ensuring their well-being. In her book "What They Don't Tell You About Managing Your Child in the Acting Business," industry veteran Paula Bergen shares invaluable insights and practical advice to guide parents through this complex journey.

Understanding the Industry Landscape

Bergen begins by outlining the different aspects of the acting business, from casting directors and agents to managers and unions. She delves into the audition process, contracts, and financial considerations. By demystifying the industry's workings, parents gain a solid understanding of the environment their child will be entering.

Protecting Your Child: Legal and Emotional Considerations

One of the most crucial aspects of managing a child actor is protecting their legal and emotional well-being. Bergen provides detailed guidance on the legal requirements for minors, including work permits, guardianships, and educational accommodations. She also emphasizes the importance of mental health and emotional support for young performers, exploring issues such as rejection, frustration, and the pressures of the industry.

Kids Act LA Help Your Young Actor Nurture Their Talent

For some actors mom and dad made sure to put them in auditions when they were just a newborn. Most babies played someone else's newborn on a TV show or movie, and some babies did commercials for things Huggies and Johnson & Johnson's products. For some actors, this was just the very beginning of their careers. For some professionals, acting comes easy. They just knew what to from experience, Others are trained to develop their skills and learn the craft.

For these young ones: Kids Act LA acting schools for kids Orange County moms and dads tend to put their kids in acting classes really early on trying to prepare their kids to be a star and this technique to my opinion works just a little bit better than the ones that throw their kids out there without any formal training.
